FAUQUIER White Sulphur Springs; Virginia, (more generally known as Warrenton Springs,) will be open for the reception of visiters on the 1st of June. Extensive improvements are in progress, that will give a new aspect to the whole establishment. No expense will be spared in adding to its embeltishment, or to the comfort and pleasure of the guests. Knowing, by ocular evidence, in numerous instances, the positive intrinsic value of the water, and its almost miraculous effect in particular cases, it has been regarded as good policy to enlarge the accommodations, and to complete the original design, so as to gratify the taste and fancy of guests, as well as to promote their health and pleasure. Stuated in a remarkably healthy region, in full view of the bold Blue Ridge, and in the vicinity of the beautiful village of Warrenton, visiters may, on horseback or in carriages, over the improving roads, enjoy the most picturesque scenery, or may seek exercise in the ten-piu alleys, the pistol gallery, the game of billiards, or the health ful dance. The lovers of music and flowers will find peculiar care has been taken to win their approval; while the fallow deer and the fawn, the gold and silver fish, the elk and the swan, may relieve a tedious hour to those who are interested in the fere matures. In a word, every step has been taken which expanded liberality could suggest, to add to the comfort and accommodation of visiters. The hurdle race and tournament, the fancy ball, masquerade and brilliant fire works, will lend their respective attractions. Nor are these preparations designed for the gay monde only. To the holy ministers of religion, of every denomination, a cordial, not a gradging invitation, is given to spend the summer, without charge. The usual services of the church are respected throughout the season.

These springs are 55 or 38 miles, according to the route taken, from Fredericksburg, and 49 or 50 from Alexandria. Tri-weekly stages will run from both these points till July, when daily lines all but inevitable.

"In my letter of yesterday evening," writes our correspondent, "I mentioned what appeared to me at that moment a rather ridiculous demand, that the national guards required the national assembly to "show" for their special gratification. Unacquainted with what was passing within, I treated this request as an unreasonable joke; but nothing was more serious; and no incident that has occurred since the 2th of February was more interesting than that which followed in compliance with that request.

"The subjoined conclusion of your report from the Chamber of Representatives will show you that the veteran republican soldier, General Courtais, interrupted a warm and somewhat desultory discussion on the necessity for the unqualified adoption by the assembly of the republic with these words:

"Citizen Representatives: The people demand that the (Chamber), and that the National Assembly have the good-ness to accompany them.

"This proposition was received with loud exclamations, in which cheering vastly predominated. When silence was in some degree restored, General Courtais added: 'In consequence, I propose that the provisional government and the citizen representatives proceed to the portice of the Palace.'

"This took place shout half-mest 5 o'clock. I was on the

and the citizen representatives proceed to the portico of the Palace.'

"This took place about half-past 5 o'clock. I was on the Place de la Concorde at the moment, amused with the various manecures resorted to by the national guards for killing time, among which were frequent appeals to the cantimers, for whose wares, organt-dimonade and la biert, the overpowering heat of the sun produced an increasing demand, when loud shouting in the direction of the bridge, which you know separates the place from the Chamber of Representatives, attracted the attention of all. In a moment the drams of the national guards called them into line. The fine regiment of lancers, ranged en battaille under the garde meable, closed their ranks, and I followed the general rush which took place toward the bridge.

"Were the most theatrical people in the world to choose a position for an exhibition of the kind that met the eye of the observer on reaching the bridge, the portico, and the immense flight of steps—the most extensive, perhaps, in Europe—lead—g to the palace of the National Assembly, would be that selected. Imagine the whole of the quays at each side of the bridge and on each side of the river crammed with people and national guards mixed irregularly. Within the railing the national guards mixed irregularly. Within the railing the national guards and saff officers filled the space that lies between it and the first steps. Above were the members of the provisional government, and beside them, and filling the whole of the filling to steps.

Madeleine in front, if human vision could reach the distance.

"The scene that presented itself defles description. The colors of the national guards had been brought within the railing by the time that I arrived. Something was wanting, but it was soon forthcoming. "The colors of the army' were called for in voices of thunder. They were brought forward, and then recommenced the proclamation of the republic, the acceptance of it, and the fraternization of the 20th of April; but it would seem that the enthusiasm yesterday surpassed that observable on the day just mentioned, and it was stimulated by the thunder of the cannon of the Invalides.

"I have not time for further description. The republic was proclaimed and accepted unequivocally by the National Assembly, in the presence of 200,000 of the people of Paris. 'Wo to those, or to any class, who shall occasion doubts of the sincerity of that acceptation.' I hear at every side today, 'To retract is impossible. The slightest appearance of reaction will raze Paris in flames and deluge its streets with blood.'

"From all that I have seen and heard, this is the general impression produced by the event of yesterday."

The Voice of the Assembly.

The Voice of the Assembly.

The following proclamation was posted up on the walls of Paris, Friday (5th) morning:

"The National Assembly, the faithful interpreter of the sentiments of the people by whom it has been elected, previous to commencing its labors—

"Declares, in the name of the French people, and in the face of the entire world, that the republic proclaimed on the 2th of February, 1818, is, and shall remain, the form of government of France.

"The republic desired by France has adopted the motto, "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

"In the name of the country, the National Assembly entreats Frenchmen of every political party to forget former feuds, and to form in future but one family. The day on feuds, and to form in future but one family. The day on which the representatives of the people met is for all the citizens the feast of concord and fraternity. "Vive la République."

(£1,000) to citizen Ledru-Rollin as a gift to the republic. It appears that some alarm existed on Thursday night in Paris. Our correspondent says, "I have just had the following note from a national guard, who was stationed at the point he mentions:

"An alerte took place at the Mairie of the first arrondissement last night, and in consequence the national guards were under arms from 12 to 2 or 3 in the morning. The men were furnished with ball cartridges. Two of them were placed at each window, and about 50 were drawn up in the court-yard. I could not ascertain whether the same measures were adopted at any other Mairie, but the peace was not disturbed." The Attempted Revolution at Cracow. - Bo of the City.

The following is the official account of this affair.
will be read with great interest: "CRACOW, April 26.

"Yesterday Baron Krieg was attacked with violence in his room, which at the same time forms his office, by a crowd of persons coming from the National Committee; his official papers were seized, and the Baron hunself subject-ed to ignominious treatment, and at least held as a hostage to the National Committee—a thrust being made at him with a blunt sabre, but without, however, doing him any injury.

ed to ignominious treatment, and at least held as a hostage to the National Committee—a thrust being made at him with a biant sabre, but without, however, doing him any injury.

"At the time when the crowd first assembled, it was not known that this demonstration was directed against the person of the commissioner, or with a view to obtain possession of the secrets of the service; and, the house being closely surrounded by armed national guards, the scenes passing within did not transpire.

"Immediately on receiving the first intelligence of what had occurred, I sent Maj. Gen. Baroe Moltke to the main guard-house, with orders to ascertain the character of the assemblage; to take with him four companies of infantry and a cavalry division, in case their services might be required, and to act as the exigency might demand.

"I caused the remaining troops to proceed immediately to the alarm-posts. On the arrival of Major General Moltke at the main guard-house, several divisions of the national guard were repairing to the scene of the uproar; the commander of the national guard was sent for, but only an adjutant appeared, and announced that the national guard alone would fulfil their duty, and that then, if they should prove insufficient, the military must interfere. Though unquestionably apprized of what was going on within the house, the national guard kept it a profound secret, and made no report on the matter. Hereupon the general went to the assembled rioters, and found that the national guard had carried off Baron Krieg find bund that the military should immediately retire; for under these conditions only could bloodshed be avoided.

"I peremptorily refused both these demands, and insisted on the immediate giving up of the captive commissioner. After three hours' negotiation, I succeeded in obtaining his release without making use of armed force; alter which, the crowd gradually retired.

"After the commissioner had been released, I did not fail to declare that I disavowed all acts which he might have signed du
